EXTRA

UGLY RUMORS

About the President's Condition.

VERY RESTLESS NIGHT.

Doctors Declining to Talk

The Exact Condition of the President in Doubt.

The Daily Fever.

The daily fever of the President occurred quite late yesterday afternoon, and was not oversevere, and no chill was experienced during the day or evening, so that it was then nearly forty-eight hours since the patient had a rigor. Dr. Hamilton was with the attending physicians when the evening examination took place. The flow of pus was found to have been copious, and its character was improved.

The Daily Fever.

The following official bulletin was given out about 7.45 o'clock: 7 P. M.--The President has done well during the day. His afternoon fever did not come on until after 3 o'clock. It is somewhat higher than yesterday, but there has been no chill. At noon his pulse was 104; temperature, 98.4°; respiration, 20. At 7 p. m. his pulse was 110; temperature, 101.8°; respiration, 24.

The Evening at the White House.

The members of the Cabinet, with their wives, spent the evening at the White House, as usual, but retired before 10 o'clock, with hope still cheering them. This was due in a great measure to the assurance given by Dr. Hamilton before he started for home. He said the high temperature and pulsation denoted by the evening bulletin need cause no alarm. The condition of the patient warranted such circumstances without their indicating anything of a dangerous nature. He said all these outward indications were now subsiding, and, in fact, they did, for by 11 p. m. both the pulse and temperature were below 100. He assured the President's family that there was no the slightest reason why he should remain, notwithstanding the fact that Dr.
Agnew's arrival had been delayed several hours by a fire at Wilmington. Dr. Hamilton accordingly took the 10:10 train for New York, with the understanding that he would return to-night, or perhaps not until Wednesday, unless he should be sent for.

The Evening at the White House.

Dr. Bliss, now that he had no bad news to talk about, was not so chary of his conversations with the press. The assembled reporters and correspondents had a long interview with him last night, which was substantially as follows: He did not remain, notwithstanding the fact that Dr.
hours by a fire at Wilmington. Dr. Hamil-ple gathered at the main entrance and awaited the bulletin with feverish anxiety.

The bulletin was somewhat delayed, and was not posted on the tree until after 9 o'clock. The department clerks who stopped to read on their way to the office were compelled to be satisfied with last night's bulletin. As usual, Postmaster-General James and Secretary Windom were among the early callers. They only remained a few minutes. The news was not as good as they had expected. The truth is, that most people were disappointed.

Disappointed with This Morning's

Bulletin.
It was not nearly as encouraging as it might have been and as people expected it would be. The history of the past three days shows that the President is in a more critical condition than the public had been led to believe, and his chances of recovery were not nearly as good as desired.

Hard to Get at the President's Exact

Condition.
Nothing definite can be learned of the President's exact condition. Private Secretary Brown and the clerks in his office all wear a cheerful look. They give a very favorable report of the situation. One of the attaches, who is on intimate terms with the President's family, said: "The President is in better condition now than at any time since the Relapse of Saturday Morning.

Private Secretary Brown talks in the same hopeful strain, but the action of the physicians do not seem to bear them out.
The President, as far as has been a pretty good barometer of the President's case. When his symptoms are favorable, and everything is looking well for his improvement, the doctors are very accessible. In fact, it seems as if they sought the most prominent places, where they could be caught by the newspaper men and the good news at once communicated to the entire world. Under such circumstances all the doctors would talk pleasantly and freely.

The Doctors Reluctant.

When on the contrary any unfavorable symptoms become manifest, the physicians make themselves exceedingly scarce, avoid newspaper men as they would the plague, and in the event of meeting one face to face, appear as though in a great hurry and can only answer questions bearing on the President's case in monosyllables. All these elements of an unfavorable change in the President's case appeared in a marked degree, this morning more so than usual.
The President was kept entirely to himself, and when they happened to show his face he was very

Grave and Mysterious.

All of them were present at the morning examination, including Dr. Agnew, who was somewhat tardy. He reached the house about 8.30 o'clock, and was at once shown to the President's room. The examination was a lengthy one, so far as can be judged.
Dr. Agnew came out about 10 o'clock, but no information could be obtained from him, as he has made it a rule not to talk about the case. Dr. Woodward left about an hour later. A reporter approached him on the subject, and asked: "How is the President doctor?" "I have nothing to say about it," was the somewhat sharp reply. Dr. Woodward is a victim to misrepresentation.
He was very cordial to newspaper men in the early days of the case, but now he is almost silent.

More Quiet at This Hour.

The President is reported to be resting quietly at this hour, and altogether doing very nicely. Dr. Agnew has just informed Mr. Brown that he is very well satisfied with the progress of the case since he last saw the President. Secretary Hunt has just closed
